The NEO Five-Factor Inventory measures five broad domains or factors of personality. The responses that you gave to the statements about your thoughts, feelings, and goals can be compared with those of other adults to give a description of your personality.

The NEO Five-Factor Inventory measures differences among normal individuals. It is not a test of intelligence or ability, and is not intended to diagnose problems of mental health or adjustment. It does, however, give you some ideas about what makes you unique in your way of thinking, feeling, and interacting with others.

This summary is intended to give you a general idea of how your personality might be described. It is not a detailed report. If you complete the inventory again, you might score somewhat differently. For most individuals, however, personality traits tend to be very stable in adulthood. Unless you experience major life changes or make deliberate efforts to change yourself, this summary should apply to you throughout your adult life.

Compared with the responses of other people, your responses suggest that you can be described as:

- Secure, hardy, and generally relaxed even under stressful conditions.
- Introverted, reserved, and serious. You prefer to be alone or with a few close friends.
- Down-to-earth, practical, traditional, and pretty much set in your ways.
- Generally warm, trusting, and agreeable, but you can sometimes be stubborn and competitive.
- Easygoing, not very well organized, and sometimes careless. You prefer not to make plans.
